beyond the usual custom, and be doubted much whether the captain ever saw the pilot's n. boat go away. A very important point to be taken into consideration was the condition of the vessel when she came into Hongkong. e With Captain McMurdo's report in view, how could any other conclusion be come to, except that she had been, and was in danger, and such ho danger he submitted, that His Lordship must bold, sitting in Admiralty, that the services rendered were in the nature of salvage and not p, towage. Not only was this a salvage of ahip, cargo, and freight, but he also submitted it was a salvage for life, and since if was competent for this court to give compensation for life salvage he should te sak His Lordship to exercise his jurisdiction in at this instance. He most emphatically contended o that there was a salvage of life. The special grounds on which the claim of promovants Il were based were first, that the services rendered us- were those by a steamer, and these were always in very highly rewarded, and second on the ground ing of maritime policy. If this service was towage only, it could only be brought in a court mt of common law by the owners of the veswe sel, and this he submitted must be most the discouraging to the masters and crews of the vessels rendering service, and who were in-ter deed the one entitled to the larger portion of on the remnneration accurring. The Attorney-in- General then went into a consideration of the rd subject of salvage on the freight, which they, 6- | common law, if a contract were declared on as cer from A to B., and the goods were not delivered at B no freight could be carned, but there or was a great difference between Maritime and Common Law as he then proceed to hip show at considerable length. In this and case, he contended, that a benefit had been it. derived from the conveyance of these goods. coal; that Mesers. Russell & Co.'s were liable as consignces of the cargo, to themselves an agents eat of the ressel for a freight pro rate dinerie. on peracti, and that in their act, by instructing Mr. Middleton to sell the coul, it was an act des of the consigners of the cargo. This fact was an so material to this part of the case that he less thought it out to have been specially shown by Mesara Russell and Cos in which character they were acting when giving the instruction a to Mr. Middleton, whether as consigness of the a cargo or owners of the ship and it was quite een competent for them to do this for they had all feer the facts in their possession. The Attorney-General then argued at some length upon the in proper attribution of this act. proceeds was $2,969 found to be a simple credit to the owners of the Eastmart Ho, the account being still open, as Mr. Dana stated that the coal in reality belonged to. The Attorney General, on behalf of the pro-movents applied for costs. The question as to whether or not the sum of $500 tendered was a ess sufficient compensation for the services or rendered woold, he thought, determine as to the fter Mr. Pollard then addressed the court on be five half of the impugnants, first considering the an the Horma, cited by the Attorney General. He aph called attention to the fact that here the serme- vice had been completed, and the entire freight fore preserved to the owners which are the facts of a the case now under consideration. What min. one movants had done did not contribute to get one freight as in the case above cited, because here he there was no freight got. After referring no teen great length to the other authorities cited, he submitted generally that in the present in by stance no freight was carned, certainly no ally freight was saved, and therefore how could there it. be any remuneration for saving. Upon the all authority of the case of the Allens the promo-The vants should first have satisfied themselves in that freight had been earned. As consigness him of the coal would Russell and Con have taken $2969 for that on which they knew they would have to pay $5,000. Up to the present moment Russell and Co. had said they Oc. did not know who were the owners of the coal e The learned counsel was then going on to the consideration of the next point towage, when

His Lordship suggested that this was a convement place to leave off, as the hour was late it vere would be better to adjourn. The court was accordingly adjourned until this morning at ten, when Mr. Pollard will conclude his agument, the Attorney General will then have the right to a general reply, which will finish the case.

(New York Round Table.) Only honest men are good laughers; a man may smile and smile, and be a villain; but the poet doesn't say he may laugh. In a rogue's igs: laugh there is something forced and hollow. like the sepalchral bass of a stage robber's ha! The ha! One misses the true ring; there is a disboks cord somewhere in the music. But a good to a laugh is an ontlet for all the bitterness of life, to a the promoter of a social harmony the lightener the promoter of a social harmony the lightener of trouble, the balm of pain, luborum dules leminen. How then shall we find executions deep and damning enough for the memory of the soulless wretch who first aimed a blow at this gracious and delightsome pastime, by affixing to its indulgence the stigma of obesity by enduciating the sardonic maxim. Laugh, and grow fat! For, say what you will, nobody likes to be fat, or at least to be thought fat, fire except, perhaps, very lean people, who is a blessing, instead of being, as it is, if we are to believe Mr. Banting's pathetic jeremiad, one of the great evils of life. Obesity, certainly, is unpleasant even to men, to women still more so, while to girls the very idea brings a gual of peculiar and sickening dread. And the reason is obvious. Fat men, even very fat men, sometimes learn to make light of their misfortune, to crack jokes upon even to some rare cases to take pride in it. and to resent the possibility of superior fatness. Bodily weight, moreover, has very often its advantages, as in a crowded outsibus, for example, where incenious fat women often profit this by their superabundance of adipose tissue to tlop down on some lank young man and y a smother him out of his seat. Size, too, if it be dmiequally distributed in the three dimensions, gives a certain dignity to carriage and manner; there is something imposing and This awful in the Jung-like presence of a fat matron of forty. But feminine obesity must be consecrated by age or marriage to win either respect or toleration: and it is difficult to conceive anything more pitiable than the lot of a young fat girl. Rightly or wrongly, our ideal. of girlish beauty is formed on the sylph-like delicate order, and consumption is preferable to emboupoint. The practice of novelists is a sufficient index of popular taste; and who ever heard of a novel with a fat heroine? That in teresting young woman who carries with her had our smiles and tears through ever so many trials and prosecutions and impossible advenould tures until she is happily married at the te of end of the last volume to the athletic young man with curly brown hair and a Roman nose, may be clamsy or awkward or alovenly, plain or homely, even downright ugly if you will without losing the sympathies of the canstant reader; but make her fat, and see where your book brings up. The rather clever. Story of a Masterpiece," which Mr Henry James, jun., is on the make her fat, and see where your book brings up. The rather clever. Story of a Masterpiece, which Mr Henry James, jun., is on anything in the Calary is likely to be raised. e, ex-their for most readers by the author's unaccountrould able insanity in making his heroine a round-golden brownness the bideous truth reveale itself—a round-shouldered, fat girl, with red bair. The round shoulders and the red hair we might forgive: in fact, red hair is rather fashionable valence, we should think likely to become so: of a but the fatness—who can take any genuine interest in the fortunes of a fat girl? d to The Norfolk Seat of H.R.H. the Prince

THE transformation that has been effected at e let | Sandringham within the last six years is very care- what has been done has been in great measure a his the result of that practical interest in such had matters which the Prince of Wales largely inimber beritz from the late Prince Consort. The estate is called Sant Dersingham in Doneted mesday Book, and was held by a freeman unnien der Harold, Barl Godwin, for a brief period ended King of England. It was porchased, as is pretn was ty well known, by the Prince of Wales in 1862, in the since which time work have been in progress to "and render the estate suitable for a royal residence. yaally A large portion of these works has only rei that cently been completed.

The completion of the model farm premises er of marks the fact that the Prince of Wales has pilot's become a practical agriculturist, and some few offing with interest. The estate consists of about 7,000 acres. 2,000 of which are heaths and plantations, no labout 500 acres of these are planted. The parkisonly about 200 acresin extent and aportion produces useful berhage, but some of it was very interior till improved by drainage and moniding, with top dressing and sprinkling with seeds. For many years a small piece of freehold land, belonging to another owner, about three nores in extent, abutted into the park; but this has recoully been purchased by the Frince, and has been thrown into the park, and all the coffages on this (the West Newton : side of the park sre being removed. The arm: which the Prince has taken into his own hands is about 480 acres in extent, and in which was formerly Cork's farm at West Newarable land and 47 acres of grass, besides about on under the Firm of 70 acres of marshes at Wolferton and Bubing. VOGEL, HAC ley. The Wolferton portion of the estate has both here and at Canton. recently been considerably added to by the reclamation of the Norfolk Estuary Company About 100 scree of the Prince's grable land consist of good and productive land; about the same quantity is a fair soil, on a chalk subsoil and the remaining 165 acres are poor or sandy light land, resting upon the carr and gravel or the West Newton health, The poorest of this land is prolific of building and road-making materials. It will be seen from what is stated above that, including the park. His Royal Highness farms about an equal quantity of arable and pusture land. The Prince's flock is made up head, including a dairy of 10 Alderney cows, S. Hook, Son & Co. with their yearling produce and calves. Twelve Devous occupy the stalls of the fattening ti 2176 Hongkons. boxes, and 31 Highlanders are in the park, as well as an Azore bull, two cows, and a calf. which have been presented to the Prince. The Highlanders are being fed on cake and hay, &c., and will be fat by May or June, when they wil be disposed of, and a fresh importation will be received at Michaelmas direct from the High-
